

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND GROUP FACILITATION SERVICES

As a separate service or as part of larger projects, Croswell-Schulte provides a variety of research, education, group facilitation services. Our work in this area is based on the precept that sound, up-to-date information and well-informed management and staff is essential for success. Our work in planning and facilitating group meetings efficiently engages participants and delivers results and solutions for organizational and program challenges. We conduct research and provide education and training support for all parts of the organization. Our work in this area makes use of information prepared by: professional associations, governmental bodies, academic institutions, non-profit research groups, private industry monitoring/market research firms, and original research. We keep up-to-date with industry products and services remain active in professional associations--participating in research and educational initiatives supported by these groups. We have the skills to convey information technology concepts and business impact to senior officials as well as address more detailed training requirements of users and technical staff. We employ proven methodologies for planning and conducting group facilitation sessions to effectively gather ideas from participants and reach consensus for action.

The research, training and education services provided by Croswell-Schulte include:

- research on technology trends impacting IT planning decisions
- surveys of information technology industry product and service offerings
- planning and facilitation of group meetings and focus group sessions and building consensus for action
- orientation seminars and briefings for management and staff
